will therefore have to go back to the House for concurrence. It is understood, however, that the changes made by the Senate are not regarded se material, and that the House will promptly concur in them by a two-thirds vote. The telegraph informs us that it will be taken up in the House to morrow. Upon its final adoption by both Houses of Congress it will be sent to the Secretary of State, who will transmit copies of it to the various States for their ratification.
